

Surf Nazis: La Jolla Beach Stories 1950-1975

An insane asylum where the walls fell down and nobody left. La Jolla, the richest community in America gave birth to world famed beach gangs like The Pump House Gang, Mac Meda Destruction Company, and the Bird Rock Bandits and spawned the original Surf Nazis. SS Storm Troopers (local surfers) erupted from a storm drain on flexi-flyers at Windansea Beach and were captured 1958 in the movie, Search for Surf, which was a blitzkrieg. Swastikas and iron crosses appeared on surfboards, T-shirts, and woodies around the world. Say What? La Jolla was a world unto itself: A rich WASPs Jurassic Park, wrapped in reefs and caves, largely undeveloped until the late 19th Century when wealthy Mid-westerners created an invitation only colony for the rich. These elites used the notorious La Jolla racialCovenant to ban property ownership and residency to non-whites until 1964 when the Federal Civil Rights Act became law. San Diego was an arsenal for democracy after WWII. San Diego defense contractors like Convair and Solar employed scientists who were former members of the Nazi Party. They had been secreted into the US under the Paperclip Program. You might meet Arthur Rudolph or Werner von Braun (heads of the Nazi V2 Missile program) walking down Girard Avenue or in the Grant Grill in downtown San Diego, in 1949. Surf Nazis were kids who grew up in this community of hypocrisy. Their parents were The Greatest Generation, the victors of the War Against Fascism. But Jews and non-whites were denied the right to own property. In 1950 with a population according to the US census of 10,000 residents, La Jolla was a town with practically no Jews, 1% blacks, and only a handful of Hispanics. La Jolla was as effectively as segregated as Selma Alabama. These children were war babies drawn together in surrogate beach families with violent names for mutual support much like the Big City Street Gangs. La Jollas Bloods and Crips, were Mac Meda Destruction Company, The Pump House Gang, the Bird Rock Bandits, and the Surf Nazis. These kids were abandoned children acting out their own anger in the most dramatic way conceivable: They threw the hated Nazi symbols back in the faces of their hypocritical parents. Surf Nazis: La Jolla Beach Stories are just stories of kids from the insane asylum where the walls fell down and nobody left: La Jolla 1950-1975.
